

Hospital stays can be unexpected — and pricey.

While you may be thinking “That’s why I offer health insurance”, it may not be enough for everyone. Medical plans may leave employees with unexpected expenses like deductibles, copays, and non-covered services they may not have planned for.

Imagine¹...

- Laura’s husband, Mike, was hospitalized with pneumonia.
- Mike spent 5 days in the hospital² and the bills started piling up.³

MetLife at their side

- Because Laura had MetLife hospital indemnity insurance, she received a lump-sum payment within 10 days, which helped her stay focused on Mike’s recovery — not their unexpected costs.⁴
- There was no need for coordination of benefits with her medical plan, so it was quick and easy to get the money she and her husband needed.

Making life a little easier

- They put most of the money towards their health plan deductible. And they used some for child care while Laura was at Mike’s side during his hospital stay.
- With the help of doctors, Mike recovered from pneumonia. And, with the help of the lump sum, Laura kept their kids cared for — and the medical bills in check.

Hospital stays account for 31% of the total national health expenditures.⁵

During Mike's recovery, Laura felt more at ease knowing that she could cover the unexpected cost of the hospital bills.
